

Mark Forman
Executive Vice President
Dynamic Integrated Services

Mark Forman is an accomplished Executive with more than 30 years of professional work experience, including a Presidential appointment to be the first U.S. Administrator for E-Government and Information Technology, the Federal Government's Chief Information Officer. As a government executive, he managed and led more than 2000 people working on 25 large multi-agency Presidential initiatives relating interactions between the federal government and citizens, businesses, state governments, and shared services across agencies. Having worked at GAO and a Senate Committee Staff, Mark was involved in key government reform laws, including IT reforms such as the Clinger Cohen and Paperwork Reduction Acts and acquisition reforms such as the Federal Acquisition Streamlining Act. As an industry executive, he built and led teams of consultants and program delivery for governments around the world while working at IBM, Unisys, KPMG, and SAIC. Mr. Forman excels at team building to define and achieve strategic programs and transformation initiatives. Mr. Forman currently leads the Enterprise Optimization Services practice at Dynamic Integrated Services, working with U.S. federal government clients to improve mission outcomes through innovation using organizational and digital transformation approaches. He has been recognized for modernizing government and improving customer focus through his work spanning a variety of government and industry positions.
